The History of Labor Day

Labor Day: How it Came About; What it Means

"Labor Day differs in every essential way from the other holidays of the year in any country," said Samuel Gompers, founder and longtime president of the American Federation of Labor. "All other holidays are in a more or less degree connected with conflicts and battles of man's prowess over man, of strife and discord for greed and power, of glories achieved by one nation over another. Labor Day...is devoted to no man, living or dead, to no sect, race, or nation." Labor Day, the first Monday in September, is a creation of the labor movement and is dedicated to the social and economic achievements of American workers. It constitutes a yearly national tribute to the contributions workers have made to the strength, prosperity, and well-being of our country.

Founder of Labor Day

More than 100 years after the first Labor Day observance, there is still some doubt as to who first proposed the holiday for workers. Some records show that Peter J. McGuire, general secretary of the Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners and a cofounder of the American Federation of Labor, was first in suggesting a day to honor those "who from rude nature have delved and carved all the grandeur we behold." But Peter McGuire's place in Labor Day history has not gone unchallenged. Many believe that Matthew Maguire, a machinist, not Peter McGuire, founded the holiday. Recent research seems to support the contention that Matthew Maguire, later the secretary of Local 344 of the International Association of Machinists in Paterson, N.J., proposed the holiday in 1882 while serving as secretary of the Central Labor Union in New York. What is clear is that the Central Labor Union adopted a Labor Day proposal and appointed a committee to plan a demonstration and picnic.

The First Labor Day

The first Labor Day holiday was celebrated on Tuesday, September 5, 1882, in New York City, in accordance with the plans of the Central Labor Union. The Central Labor Union held its second Labor Day holiday just a year later, on September 5, 1883. In 1884 the first Monday in September was selected as the holiday, as originally proposed, and the Central Labor Union urged similar organizations in other cities to follow the example of New York and celebrate a "workingmen's holiday" on that date. The idea spread with the growth of labor organizations, and in 1885 Labor Day was celebrated in many industrial centers of the country.

Labor Day Legislation

Through the years the nation gave increasing emphasis to Labor Day. The first governmental recognition came through municipal ordinances passed during 1885 and 1886. From them developed the movement to secure state legislation. The first governmental recognition came through municipal ordinances passed during 1885 and 1886. From them developed the movement to secure state legislation. The first state bill was introduced into the New York legislature, but the first to become law was passed by Oregon on February 21, 1887. During the year four more states — Colorado, Massachusetts, New Jersey, and New York — created the Labor Day holiday by legislative enactment. By the end of the decade Connecticut, Nebraska, and Pennsylvania had followed suit. By 1894, 23 other states had adopted the holiday in honor of workers, and on June 28 of that year, Congress passed an act making the first Monday in September of each year a legal holiday in the District of Columbia and the territories.

A Nationwide Holiday

The form that the observance and celebration of Labor Day should take were outlined in the first proposal of the holiday — a street parade to exhibit to the public "the strength and esprit de corps of the trade and labor organizations" of the community, followed by a festival for the recreation and amusement of the workers and their families. This became the pattern for the celebrations of Labor Day. Speeches by prominent men and women were introduced later, as more emphasis was placed upon the economic and civic significance of the holiday. Still later, by a resolution of the American Federation of Labor convention of 1909, the Sunday preceding Labor Day was adopted as Labor Sunday and dedicated to the spiritual and educational aspects of the labor movement.

The character of the Labor Day celebration has undergone a change in recent years, especially in large industrial centers where mass displays and huge parades have proved a problem. This change, however, is more a shift in emphasis and medium of expression. Labor Day addresses by leading union officials, industrialists, educators, clerics and government officials are given wide coverage in newspapers, radio, and television.

The vital force of labor added materially to the highest standard of living and the greatest production the world has ever known and has brought us closer to the realization of our traditional ideals of economic and political democracy. It is appropriate, therefore, that the nation pay tribute on Labor Day to the creator of so much of the nation's strength, freedom, and leadership — the American worker. Source: www.dol.gov

Ghana Public Holidays

Below are listed Public Holidays for the January 2006-June 2007 period.

Jan 1 2006: New Year's Day.

Jan 10: Eid al-Adha (Feast of the Sacrifice).

Mar 6: Independence Day. Apr 14: Good Friday.

Apr 17: Easter Monday.

May 1: Labor Day.

May 25: Africa Day.

Jun 4: Anniversary of the 1979 Coup.

Jul 1: Republic Day.

Oct 22-24: Eid al-Fitr (End of Ramadan).

Dec 1: National Farmers' Day.

Dec 25-26: Christmas.

Dec 31: Revolution Day; Eid al-Adha (Feast of the Sacrifice).

Note

Muslim festivals are timed according to local sightings of various phases of the moon and the dates given above are approximations. During the lunar month of Ramadan that precedes Eid al-Fitr, Muslims fast during the day and feast at night and normal business patterns may be interrupted. Many restaurants are closed during the day and there may be restrictions on smoking and drinking. Some disruption may continue into Eid al-Fitr itself. Eid al-Fitr and Eid al-Adha may last anything from two to 10 days, depending on the region. Source: www.africa.com

The Mossi of Northern Ghana and Burkina Faso

Art: The Mossi make both political art and spiritual art. Figures are used by the ruling class to validate political power, and masks are used by the conquered peoples to control the forces of nature. Each year at the annual celebrations of the royal ancestors, figures of the deceased kings are displayed. On many occasions each year, especially during the long dry season from October to May, masks appear to honor the spirits of nature that control the forces of the environment The several mask styles reflect the diversity of the population before the 15th century invasion. Long tall masks in the north are made by the descendants of the conquered Dogon population, while red, white, and black animal masks in the southwest are made by descendants of the conquered Gurunsi peoples.

History: The Mossi states were created about 1500 A.D., when bands of horsemen rode north from what is now northern Ghana into the basin of the Volta River and conquered several less powerful peoples, including Dogon, Lela, Nuna, and Kurumba. These were integrated into a new society call Mossi, with the invaders as chiefs and the conquered as commoners. The emperor of the Mossi is the Moro Naba, who lives in the ancient and contemporary capital, Ouagadougou. In the centuries between 1500 and 1900 the Mossi were a major political and military force in the bend of the Niger River and were effective in resisting the movements of Muslim Fulani armies across the Sudan area of west Africa. In 1897 the first French military explorers arrived in the area and staked French colonial claims. During the sixty years of French colonial rule the Mossi population was exploited as a source of human labor for French plantations in Côte d'Ivoire. In 1960 Burkina Faso gained its independence from the French. The first elected president Ouezzin Coulibaly was succeeded by Maurice Yameogo, a Mossi. In 1967 a coup-d'état put in place a military government that has ruled with infrequent change ever since.

Economy: The Mossi are primarily farmers, raising millet, sorghum, maize, sesame, peanuts, and indigo. The latter three are cash crops that are raised for export. Large numbers of Mossi live in the urban centers of Ouagadougou, Ouahigouya, Kaya, Yako, Koudougou. During the colonial period the French exercised a policy of deliberate underdevelopment intended to force Mossi laborers to leave their homes following the harvest and migrate by the French-built railroad to Côte d'Ivoire where they worked in French-owned factories and plantations. From the founding of the Mossi states to the present the economy of Burkina Faso and of the Mossi benefitted from their position astride major trade routes between the forest and the desert and from the open trade policies of the government surrounded by countries such as Ghana and Mali which restricted trade.

Politics: The Mossi are unique in Burkina Faso for their centralized and hierarchical political system. The nakomse are the ruling class and are directed descendants of the first invaders from the south. At the apex of political hierarchy is the emperor (Moro Naba), whose palace is in Ouagadougou, the capital of Burkina Faso. Chiefs (nabas) rule over each of the regions of Mossi country and pay homage to the emperor. Each chief presides over a political hierarchy of local officials who are responsible for raising armies, levying taxes, etc. The nyonyose are the descendants of the conquered peoples who lived in the region before the Mossi arrived.

Religion: The descendants of the conquered farmers (nyonyose) honor nature spirits that provide them with supernatural power to control the weather, disease, crop failure, and general well-being. These are the "invented spirits" that become important as the congregation faces a particular affliction and which decrease in influence as the problem is solved. These spirits are often represented by masks and figures that make them visible and concrete. The spirits themselves provide, through the diviner, the religious laws that govern the community and so provide a system of sacred rule. The creator god Wennam is associated with the sun and with the political hierarchy (nakomse). The spiritual power of the nyonyose based on nature spirits is in direct opposition to the secular power of the nakomse based on the horse and associated with the sun. Among the most important religious celebrations are annual sacrifices to honor the memories of the royal ancestors, when each and every male head of a household reaffirms his dependence on the benevolence of the chief and his ancestors for health and well-being of his family.

STAYING HEALTHY IN ACCRA

Skin Cancer Prevention and Detection

Skin cancer begins in cells, the building blocks that make up the skin. Normally, skin cells grow and divide to form new cells. Every day skin cells grow old and die, and new cells take their place. Sometimes, this orderly process goes wrong. New cells form when the skin does not need them, and old cells do not die when they should. These extra cells can form a mass of tissue called a growth or tumor.

Types of Skin Cancer

Skin cancers are named for the type of cells that become cancerous. The two most common types of skin cancer are basal cell cancer and squamous cell cancer. These cancers usually form on the head, face, neck, hands, and arms. These areas are exposed to the sun. But skin cancer can occur anywhere.

- Basal cell skin cancer usually occurs on areas of the skin that have been in the sun. It is most common on the face. Basal cell cancer rarely spreads to other parts of the body.
- Squamous cell skin cancer also occurs on parts of the skin that have been in the sun. But it also may be in places that are not in the sun. Squamous cell cancer sometimes spreads to lymph nodes and organs inside the body.
- Melanoma is a much less common form of skin cancer, however it is the most serious.

Studies have found the following risk factors for skin cancer:

- Ultraviolet (UV) radiation:
- Scars or burns on the skin
- Infection with certain human papillomaviruses
- Exposure to arsenic at work
- Chronic skin inflammation or skin ulcers
- Diseases that make the skin sensitive to the sun, such as xeroderma pigmentosum, and albinism
- Radiation therapy
- Medical conditions or drugs that suppress the immune system
- · Personal history of one or more skin cancers
- Family history of skin cancer
- Actinic keratosis: Actinic keratosis is a type of flat, scaly growth on the skin. It is most often found on areas exposed to the sun, especially the face and the backs of the hands.

How To Do a Skin Self-Exam

The best time to do this exam is after a shower or bath. You should check your skin in a room with plenty of light. You should use a full-length mirror and a hand-held mirror. It's best to begin by learning where your birthmarks, moles, and other marks are and their usual look and feel.

Check for anything new:

- New mole (that looks different from your other moles
- New red or darker color flaky patch that may be a little raised
- New flesh-colored firm bump
- Change in the size, shape, color, or feel of a mole
- Sore that does not heal

Check yourself from head to toe. Don't forget to check your back, scalp, genital area, and between your buttocks.

- Look at your face, neck, ears, and scalp. You may want to use a comb or a blow dryer to move your hair so that you can see better. You also may want to have a relative or friend check through your hair. It may be hard to check your scalp by yourself.
- Look at the front and back of your body in the mirror. Then, raise your arms and look at your left and right sides.
- Bend your elbows. Look carefully at your fingernails, palms, forearms (including the undersides), and upper arms.
- Examine the back, front, and sides of your legs. Also look around your genital area and between your buttocks.
- Sit and closely examine your feet, including your toenails, your soles, and the spaces between your toes.

By checking your skin regularly, you will learn what is normal for you. It may be helpful to record the dates of your skin exams and to write notes about the way your skin looks. If your doctor has taken photos of your skin, you can compare your skin to the photos to help check for changes. If you find anything unusual, see your doctor. References: http://www.cancer.gov

Pet Care In Accra Too Much Heart: A Problem for Middle-Aged Cats

Kim Marie Labak Information Specialist University of Illinois College of Veterinary Medicine

Hypertrophic cardiomyopathy, which is a thickening or overgrowth of heart muscle, is a common heart condition seen in cats, and also happens to be one of the leading causes of sudden heart failure in athletic young men.

When we lift weights, our muscles get stronger and bigger. Likewise, heart muscle also grows with exercise or other increased workload. Under normal conditions, strengthening of heart muscle is usually beneficial. However, Dr. David Sisson, a veterinary cardiologist formerly with the University of Illinois Veterinary Teaching Hospital in Urbana, explains that when heart muscle growth is uncontrolled due to genetic or hormonal abnormalities, the ventricular walls can become thickened, leaving less room in the ventricles for blood.

Thickened ventricle walls also lose their ability to expand, further impairing the heart's ability to fill with blood. If the heart cannot fill with sufficient amounts of blood, heart failure results.

Often, the cause for hypertrophic cardiomyopathy in a cat is idiopathic, or unknown. Dr. Sisson says there is evidence that many cases may be due to an inherited genetic defect that does not become apparent until a cat is middle-aged.

Other cases of hypertrophic cardiomyopathy are caused by hyperthyroidism, a common disease in older cats, in which benign thyroid tumors produce excess T4, or thyroid hormone. T4 increases the heart rate, and the heart muscle thickens in response to this increased workload. T4 can also directly cause the heart muscle to thicken by signaling the heart cells to enlarge. Fortunately, hyperthyroidism is very treatable, and once this is treated, the resulting cardiomyopathy is also resolved.

Dr. Mark Oyama, also a cardiologist at the Veterinary Teaching Hospital, explains that the idiopathic form is treatable, but is more difficult to catch early, before it causes heart failure or blood clots. The prognosis for cats with heart failure or a clot are poor, but if a veterinarian diagnoses a cardiomyopathy before these happen, drug therapy can add several quality years to a cat's life.

The question is: how do veterinarians catch this condition early? Heart murmurs accompany cardiomyopathies in only about half of the cases, so a veterinarian will not always "hear" a problem through a stethoscope. Often thickened ventricular walls can be seen on ultrasound images, but as in human medicine, ultrasound is too expensive and impractical to use as a screening test for all middle-aged cats.

Currently, an efficient screening test in human medicine is used to measure levels of brain naturetic peptide, or BNP, a hormone produced by heart muscle. This simple blood test can tell doctors when BNP levels are abnormal, indicating that an ultrasound is in order to look for heart abnormalities.

Since feline BNP is very different from human BNP, this test does not work for cats, but Dr. Sisson and colleagues, through their research at the University of Illinois, have developed a biochemical test for feline BNP that may be commercially available to veterinarians within the next few years. With a test like this, veterinarians would be able to screen middle-aged cats for heart conditions before the cats display any signs of disease.

For more information about hypertrophic cardiomyopathy or other feline heart conditions, contact you local veterinarian or visit the Web site of the American College of Veterinary Internal Medicine at www.acvim.org and click on "Pet Owners & Public." Okyeame Page 6

CDs for Sale Peace Corps Volunteer and musician Tonya Stephenson, who lives and works in a small community near Bolgatanga, is selling CDs to support the Tengzug Youth Choir. The choir, which was formed in 2005, has 15 girls and boys ages 12-16. Proceeds from the sale of the CDs will provide support for the choir members to attend Senior Secondary School. The songs are in Talan (local language), Frafra, Zulu, and English. If you are interested in purchasing a CD and helping to support this worthy project you can contact Mary Jordan (spouse of Karl Field) at 0243 833 010. (1)
